we must abandon the goal of exponential growth. It is not negative growth; it could be characterized as "a-growth," in the sense to say farewell to a faith or religion (like atheism). It is definitively not the same as "sustainable development," which Latouche criticizes as a pleonasm and an oxymoron at the same time.

De-growth isn't the similar factor as destructive development. we must always be conversing approximately "a-growth," within the experience within which we communicate of "a-theism." And we do certainly need to abandon a religion or faith " that of the economic climate, development and development"and reject the irrational and quasi-idolatrous cult of progress for growth's sake.

Farewell to Growth, by Serge Latouche. He's a French political theorist with decades of subversive ideas behind him, postgrowth being the best known today. Farewell to Growth was first published under the title Petit traité de la décroissance sereine (Little treatise on serene degrowth) and like the rest of the book, some of the elegance goes astray in translation.
