So on Aristotle's account, although the soul is not a material object, it is not separable from the body. (When it comes to the intellect, however, Aristotle waffles. See DA III.4) The soul is the cause (aition) of life (the soul is the cause and principle of the living body, 415b8). That is, the soul plays an explanatory role: a.

soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. It was the scripture above that I was studying when the Lord led me into a simple little exercise that has blossomed into a great lesson for me. I was looking at the verse and specifically concentrating on the soul and spirit reference.

Therefore, it is necessary that the soul be substance as the species of a natural body having life potentially. Substance, however, is actuality. Therefore, soul is the actuality of such a body. 117. But this [actuality] is said in two ways, one as science, the other as consideration. It is clear, therefore, that [the soul is] as science.

On the Soul (Greek  $\text{Περὶ ψυχῆς}$ , Peri Psychḗs; Latin De Anima) is a major treatise written by Aristotle c. 350 BC. Although its topic is the soul, it is not about spirituality but rather a work in what might best be described as biopsychology, a description of the subject of psychology within a biological framework.
