In theoretical linguistics, a speaker's judgement on the well-formedness of a linguistic 'string' is called a grammaticality judgement and is based on whether the sentence is interpreted in accordance with the rules and constraints of the relevant grammar. If the rules and constraints of the particular lect are followed, then the sentence is judged to be grammatical.

Frameworks of grammar, which attempt to give a precise scientific theory of the syntax rules of grammar and their function, have been developed in theoretical linguistics. Most mainstream frameworks are based on the conception of an innate "universal grammar", an idea developed by Noam Chomsky. The most prominent theories are:

English is a West Germanic language that was first spoken in early medieval England and eventually became a global lingua franca . It is named after the Angles , one of the Germanic tribes that migrated to the area of Great Britain that later took their name, as England . Both names derive from Anglia , a peninsula in the Baltic Sea . The language is closely related to Frisian and Low Saxon ...

Update July 1st: Google Scholar has now manually blocked Prof. et al. from appearing in top rankings for her disciplines. They probably thought her too prominent a reminder of the gameability of their system. This doesn't solve the underlying problem of auto-updating profiles like Yi Zhang and John A. Smith diluting top rankings.
