The connection between Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec and The Museum of Modern Art dates back to the institution's earliest days. In 1931, just two years after it was founded, the Museum presented Toulouse-Lautrec, Redon, an exhibition that recognized Lautrec as a fundamental figure in the history and development of modern art.

Lautrec's oils, vibrant though they often are, have changed the course of art less than his work on the lithographic stone. Lautrec created the modern poster. He jumped to fame when his huge lithographs appeared on every billboard to startle Paris with their simplified colors and calculated design.
